MARCH

Once upon a time in a far, far away Land of Stonestia lives a beautiful princess with golden red hair. Her name was Katonia. She lives in a glorious castle that touched the sky even on the cloudiest of days. There was always sun on her castle and birds at her windows. She could see as far as the eyes would let her, out across the meadows, over the forests, all the way to the open sea.

On some days she could even see the ships at the port of Stonestia with their billowy white sails, and dark, wet, wave-scoured wooden sides. These ships delivered trade goods, supplies and even sparkling jewels all the way from another far off land called Aciremia.

The princess had one wish, to visit Aciremia with her beloved prince, but the curse of the Land had barred her and her prince from such wonderful adventures and travels since before she were born. Ships may come in, but no one was ever permitted to leave by order of the Evil and Terrible Queen Anabibia. The evil queen was wickedly jealous of the princess and her happiness and so took out her anger on all of the people of Stonestia to forever remain prisoners of their own Land.

But what the evil queen had failed to consider when she had cast her evil curse was the one Golden Key that would unlock not only the doorways to other worlds, but also break the spell on Stonestia forever. (There is always a way to remove a curse if you only know the magic and where to find it.) And so the princess determined as she was to travel to other lands and lift the wily curse upon her Kingdom, set out in search of the Golden Key, and her peoples followed her.

A dramatic fantasy illustration featuring a massive red dragon with its wings spread wide, flying across a sky filled with soft, white clouds. The dragon's body is a vibrant red, and its wings have a darker, almost black, underside. In the foreground, a lone warrior in dark, rugged armor stands on the edge of a dark, rocky cliff, looking up at the dragon. The warrior holds a sword. The overall scene is set against a backdrop of a bright sun in the upper right corner, casting a warm glow over the scene. Several smaller birds or dragons are visible in the distance, adding to the sense of a vast, mythical world.
